FROM TEXAS—We have learned with deep regret that the indiaes on our Northern frontier have become so insolent and overbearing since the rangers have been withdrawn, that the settlers are hourly in fear that new outrages will be perpetrated, and another lindian war will be commenced. The following extract from a letter received a few days since shows the alarming state of affairs in that section:

NAYARNO CO. TEXAS, Jan. 18, 1849.

We are now laboring under a grievance which we cannot and will not bear. Hundreds of Indians of all stree and ages are let loose and permitted to come into the settlementa to annoy the inhabitants. As yet they have done nothing worse, so far as we learn, than to steal a few bells, a little corn, crowd clitzens from their res, and threaten their lives. Report says they first a few rounds at the mall carrier, and it is well known that one would have stabbed a white mma a few days since, but for the interference of bystanders. The people here have been told that the Government had coldiers and agents to keep the Indians back out of the settlements. If so, they have not performed their duty to the Government or country. They are allowed to penetrate more than a hundred miles into the white settlements, and among a population who will rise or masse and expel them it they are permitted to remain much longer, or to return here.

not be mingled with things present. Sufficient for the day was the evil thereof. It was not well to dwell too much on the fact, nor wise to attempt too much for the future. Our present duty was to give a peaceable Government to California, to preserve the lives of good disposed residents, and to restrain those who were evil disposed.—We should not go beyond this object a present. No attempt should be made to execute the revenue laws, it could not be done without courts, which could only be established under a regular Government. Any Government for those Territories must be at present substantially military. A bill had come from the House for extending the revenue laws over the Territories.—This course, he would recomment to the General Appropriation bill, and when that bill should be disposed of, to take up the subject of the Territories and act indepently on it. If the Senate should see fit to adopt this course, when the House bill alluded to comes up, he would move to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the proposition handed in by him on Wednesday. The disposition which had been manifested by the Senate, showed that some of those amendments to the General Appropriation bill were acceptable. He had avoided and would avoid all extraneous subjects which were calculated to excete local prejudices. He would expose all movements which were calculated to prevent the adoption of a secure system for regulating and preserving peace in the New Territories. Mr. Webster spoke about fifteen minutes. Mr. Poor z followed in reply to the remarks of the Senator from New-Jersey. His topics of discourse were Siavery cessation, abolitionism. The Chark decided that the gentleman could go on, and Mr. TURNER accordingly resumed his remarks, and stated his views upon the subject at full length.

Mr. McDowell was the next speaker, and gave an elaborate argument in favor of the principles of the California bills of Mr. Dovel as in the Senate, and of Mr. Parstron in the House. He assumed a conservative position, and called upon all sections to remember and obey the counsel of Washington, and come up to the settlement of the Territorial quastion like brethren and patriots. The House listened attentively to his remarks. When his hour had expired the House, by acclamation, urged him to go on. He bowed thanks and proceeded in eloquent strains to dilate upon the revolutionary compromises of the Constitution, and the necessity of carrying out the country's destiny like brethren of one mighty Republic. His concluding observations brought tears down many a manly cheek. Mr. PUTAN mext obtained the floor, and amid much confusion the Committee rose—but finally, to such confusion the Committee rose-but finally, to arry a motion for adjournment, went back into Committee, and the discussion was continued by Mr. Pur NAM and Mr. Horack MANN in able speeches upon the Northern side of the question.

FALL ON THE ICE .- A man, whose name could ot be ascertained fell on the ice in Myrtle-avenue on Thursday afternoon, and fractured his skull by the vio-lence of his fall. He was immediately picked up, the e words are the words are the blood streaming from both ears, and carried ito the company at more partial to the drug store at the corner of Myrtle-avenue and Pearl-at, where every assistance was rendered him. Some friends, hearing of his situation, had him removed to his residence; but our reporter could not learn where he lived. This accident was occasioned by some boys, who are in the habit of making sliding places on the pavement wherever a slight inclination in the street is to be found.

the times—the poet only gave the ideal of that which existed in the actual life. In Shakspeare words are used by the most pleasing female characters which we would not be allowed to read in the presence of females, and if man were to make use of them in company at the present day, he would be banished from respectable society. Another part, and the hardest to explain, is the mixing of absolute coarseness of conversation with thoughts most pure. If we can reconcile the other part is there in this last case a contradiction in character, and has not the poet put together what seems a mass of incongruities? The poet was the general representative of his own and past times; his seeming incongruities do not rise from his own mind but have their origin in Nature, and are to be reconciled to fact by a thoughtincongruities? The poet was the general representative of his own and past times; his seeming incongruities do not rise from his own mind but have their origin in Nature, and are to be reconciled to fact by a thought ful study of Nature herself. He spoke, in pursuance of this, of the sudden transitions that take place in the character of a people even when the strictest external modesty is preserved.

How thoroughly, said the lecturer, were Shakspeare's women women and nothing else, and though differing from each other, always women. Nothing, he said, was more subduing to the heart of man than the love of woman, whether as child, daughter or wife; nothing is more subduing to the soul of man than the love of woman, whether as child, daughter or wife; nothing is more subduing to the soul of man than the words. The demona's love is owing to that love being formed by the purity of her own nature, for had she been less of woman in her original constitution, there would not have been those perfect developments of the woman. The true man is conscious of the sense of the beautiful in woman, which woman in herself can never discover. The spiritual beauty, peculiar to woman, its a stranger—so far as her knowledge of it is concerned—there would be too much displayed in the love of it. If we trace Desdemona through her love, nothing strikes us so much as her trust, her confiding disposition and her forgiving temper. With a woman's dignity under all her sorrow, she could not believe herself suspected, because she had nothing in her deserving of suspicion—a dignity that moves our pity. She was a true woman, acting according to the sacred relations of a wife to a husband; for she saw that while in the hight of rage, and torn with passion, tears like a woman's tears fell from him.—Mr. Dana introduced during the course of the character of Desdemona.

The Pacific Mailsan away in Main st. yesterday afternoon, and on near ing the ferry, struck the curb-stone opposite Mr. Brivel's store at the corner of Front and Main sts. which threw the driver out of the wagon among some barrels on the side walk. The man was not much burt; the wagon was considerably 'smashed."
